Jan Malvin is a Berlin-based director working across commercials, documentary and branded content. As a kid he wasn't allowed to watch much TV – so he grabbed the family camcorder and started making his own. His first commercial, for an environmental non-profit, screened in local cinemas before he'd even hit his teens. After school, he worked his way through nearly every department on set while earning a university degree in Digital Media.

His films are honest and observant, often close to documentary, and always in search of a fresh but true perspective. He pairs that with cinematic images and a sharp sense for editing and rhythm. He's drawn to people – how they think and act, and how they change the world around them. For him, every film is an excuse to dig deep into something new – which might just be the best part of the job.
