Josh is a skate-video-making kid turned commercial director. After dabbling in acting and attending drama school, he realized that his true passion was behind the camera.

University pushed him into nightlife, club videos, festival videos which eventually led to brand videos. He honed his craft as a director and before he knew it, he was directing commercials and somehow managed to skip the music video phase.

His films tend to lean toward a dynamic style. He likes to take the viewer on a journey but never lets that push into something that feels like a gimmick. His camera is always motivated by something in the scene and has rationale as to how and why it moves. He likes unique and interesting characters that are grounded in reality even if that reality is slightly elevated or "hyper-real". He also has a knack for incorporating elements of comedy into his films, and is always on the lookout for scripts with a touch of surrealism. Essentially he wants his films to make people go ‘Well...that’s cool AF!'

He has 2 young kids, is a coffee snob and hot sauce obsessed. He may be a director, but when he is not behind the camera his mission is to show the world that golf is actually a pretty cool sport. (yes, golf)
